The Barre man who says he has "urgent business" in Montpelier nowadays is looked at twice for traces of sincerity.

The French shut their eyes and declare, "No, the Russians are not in French waters." It may take an international stick to pry their eyes open.

There may be nothing in a name, but three intoxicated men were arrested on Fuller street in Montpelier the other day. They were more full than less, that's certain.

A Brandon youth says that he piled railroad ties in front of a train to wreck the train, but doesn't know why he did it. His memory needs a refreshing, and the reason, or reason, may come to him.

A young man in Warren, who has recently fallen heir to a small fortune, announces that he will spend part of it in getting an education. It's the best investment the young man could make, although the interest will not be in money.

HE SAVES MANY LIVES.

Man Jumps Overboard from a Steamer With Dynamite.

Richmond, Va., May 16.—With a box containing 50 pounds of dynamite under his arm, one end of the box being in a blaze, Robert Pocklington leaped into the James River, Sunday afternoon, saving an Old Dominion steamer and a number of wharves from destruction. More important still, he saved the lives of scores of men who were at work on the vessel and about the dock, establishing his title to one of the Carnegie medals for heroes.

The brave deed was done near the Old Dominion wharf, where a machine is at work drilling holes in the rocky bottom of the James to blast out and deepen the channel. Pocklington was hard at work when a man near him yelled: "My God, the dynamite box is on fire." Without a moment's hesitation Pocklington caught the dangerous object in his arms, and dived over the side into 15 feet of water. He went to the bottom like a rock, but came to the surface with a vigorous spring, the box of dynamite still under his arm with the blaze extinguished. The box was still there when he was drawn aboard the dredge.

The box took fire from some cotton waste which had been ignited by the heat of the boiler.

THE HAPPY COUNTRY UP-TO-DATE

[With Due Apologies.]

I hope to reach those shining realms,
When I lie down and die,
Where persons say that choir in white
Will greet the wanderer's eye.
Oh joy! to reach that happy land—
That region free from care,
For spirits whisper in my dreams
There are no kickers there.

The harps may all be out of tune,
The music split one's ears;
The white-robed singers hoarse as crows,
And still no groans nor tears.
The sandals may be out at toes,
And stockings worn threadbare;
Yet naught can mar their placid bliss—
There are no kickers there.

Though jasper walls be off the plumb
And towers are built on sand,
Though streets be mired with breeding beds,
None will dare reprimand.
No spirits will dissolve in tears,
Nor city fathers swear,
Those saintly souls are free from guile—
There are no kickers there.

Should the city council float a loan
To pave the golden streets,
And sink ten thousand in the deal,
There'll be no vows nor threats.
No landlords will injunctions bring,
To shirk assessments fair,
By pettifogging lawyers led—
There are no kickers there.

I contemplate that happy land,
And wish that I were there,
No cranks, nor chumps, to grieve the soul
And put one in despair.
Oh! may I wear celestial robes,
Close by Saint Peter's chair,
And dwell forever in those realms—
There are no kickers there.

THE STORY OF AN UNWISE MAN.

A news item now going the rounds of the Vermont press states that a Weston, Vt., man lost $500.00 by the burning of his house recently. He had been saving the money to buy a farm and, not having confidence in banks, had kept the money in the house.

No State in the Union has fewer bank failures than Vermont. Our banks, as a rule, are well and conservatively managed. Yet even in Vermont we occasionally see items similar to the one quoted above.

Perhaps the man with a little surplus money will sometime learn that the safest place for his money is a well managed bank. If there are any people in this vicinity who deposit their money under the floor, or in the traditional stocking, we would suggest that they change their deposit to the Granite Savings Bank and Trust Company, Barre, Vt. Interest paid on savings deposits. Correspondence invited.
